Bridging the Gap Between elected representatives and their constituents

A nation is at peace when a level of trust and understanding exists between the instruments of state and its citizens. Elected representative whose work is to make policies, and ensure that the policies and actions are responsive to the needs and aspirations of the people. For the elected representatives to work effectively it is essential that they actively engage with constituents. Pro active engagements help them understand the constituents needs and current conditions of the constituency. Lawmakers can also take on constituents' opinion on the bills or the policy that they aim to introduce in the council. This will help them gather support and once the bill becomes a law it gets greater trust & ownership from the citizens.

Local government is an integral part of any democratic system. Being closer to the people, with better knowledge of local issues, and by engaging with local communities and citizens, this system helps in finding sustainable solutions for social, economic, and material needs. It is widely accepted at national and international level that local authorities are responsible for delivering a broad range of services in relation to roads and traffic; planning; housing; economic and community development; environment; recreation and amenity services; fire services and for maintaining the register of electors. Moreover, because of its proximity to the people, the local governments are in a better position to ensure that government policies translate into services that will automatically meet the needs of the people.

Communication between the elected representative and their constituents play a key role in making the local government effective. In this regard, Shehri-Citizens for a Better Environment has organized an 'open courts' (Khuli Katchery) on Saturday, 13th May 2023 (10:00 am) at District Sukkur (Rohri). The constituents (will narrate their issues and set forth the problems which they face concurrently to their elected representatives.
